ARCHITECTURAL HISTORY

Curious about those 2,160 windows? Kathleen Ahmanson Hall, designed by architect Eliot Noyes, opened in 1963 as IBM Aerospace Headquarters. The small, rectangular windows were inspired by the technology of the time: computer punch cards. The building was purchased by Otis in 1995.

In 2001, the Bronya and Andy Galef Center for Fine Arts opened. Frederick Fisher Architects designed its complex geometry and corrugated metal forms to contrast with the “punch card” vocabulary of Kathleen Ahmanson Hall.

OPENING IN FALL 2016

Otis has broken ground for a new art and design complex that will strengthen the College community and turn the campus into a cultural destination for the L.A. region.
